Crypto tokens are a type of cryptocurrency that represents an asset or specific use and reside on their own blockchain. Tokens can be used for investment purposes, to store value, or to make purchases.

A crypto token is a virtual currency token or a denomination of a cryptocurrency. It represents a tradable asset or utility that resides on its own blockchain and allows the holder to use it for investment or economic purposes.

In the case of security tokens, their most common use is as a fundraising vehicle in ICOs.

However, if we're discussing the "ICO" of a utility token, those companies prefer the terms token generation events or token distribution events.

Since the token industry is still in its infancy, it's hard to categorise potential token uses in this manner. Ultimately, the possible uses of a given token will be determined by the company that issues said token.

As blockchain enterprises mature and address the issues of government regulation and investor and customer accessibility, we can expect more innovative ways to put tokens to use. Tokens will be used as a method of:

- Payment between different parties who accept to use it as a currency
- Digital asset ownership (real estate, products, company shares)
- Accounting for digital actions
- Reward to participants in a network
- Ensuring network protection
- Installing a gateway to extra services
- Providing a better user experience

Crypto Coin vs Token:

The crypto industry has said that the key distinction between coins and tokens is that crypto coins are the native asset of a Blockchain like Bitcoin or Ethereum, whereas crypto tokens are created by platforms and applications that are built on top of an existing Blockchain.
